

PETER MARSHALL'S

Celebrity Piggy

GAME

BY MILTON BRADLEY

Here's a fast moving fun game for people of all ages. It's a great party game because any number of people can play. Or you can challenge just one person to a duel with the dice. A word of caution about the dice—they may look like regular dice but they're not! In place of 1's, they have pictures of smiling pigs. Do they know something you don't know?

Rules For Play

Everybody antes one chip into the pot. If you run short of chips, you can make substitutions. Hopefully, you'll use something more practical than slices of pizza—like coins.

Each player rolls the dice and the player with the lowest roll goes first. (You knew this game was different!)

The object of the game is to roll the dice and add up your points. The first player to reach 100 points is the winner.

You roll the dice as many times as you want and add up your points for your score. But there's a catch of course. If while rolling the dice a smiling little piggy pops up, then that's the end of your turn. Pass the dice to the next player—either to the player on your right or left (just make sure you follow the same order all through the game). You also LOSE all the points you made in that turn. So maybe it's more accurate to say you roll the dice as many times as you dare.

So the dice go around a few times and everybody is having a good time. Then somebody gets greedy and decides to keep rolling again and again. This person is really pressing his luck! Why? Because if he rolls two piggies, he has big problems! He loses all the points he has scored for the whole game. Not only that, everybody oinks at him for being so greedy. But that's not all. He has to ante into the pot AGAIN. The stakes get higher and higher.

That's the game—you take turns rolling the dice and adding to your score. The first player to reach 100 points is the winner. The winner gets all the chips, or whatever you decided to play for, in the pot. Plus, whoever has a score of zero when someone gets 100 has to ante into the pot again.

Encourage your friends to be greedy but you play cautiously. Just think of all the loot you'll win!
